Scene One

CASTING NOTE: Play directly to the camera. Please shoot this as a wide shot so we can see you sit at the end of the scene.

After helping my parents care for my grandma, I saw the importance of being there for people, especially when they need you. It ignited my passion, and then, my career. But what would that look like for people with disabilities?

Dani is standing in a group home.

Thankfully, the leadership at Developmental Foundations has my back.

She sees a trainer walk by, they shake hands and smile as they pass her.

From the moment I was hired, I had access to training and support to be prepared for every step of the way. I learned about dietary needs, cleaning tasks, even CPR and first aid classes. We covered everything needed to create a safe and nurturing environment.

Sit down with a pile of laundry in front of you, start to fold.

It wasn't easy, but the training was in the home I worked at, giving me hands-on experience and boosting my confidence. As a direct support professional, or DSP, I have support from my co-workers, supervisors, and office staff to ensure I can give those in my care the attention they need.

Continue folding the clothes and enjoying time with your coworkers.

Scene Two

CASTING NOTE: Pretend you are having coffee with a friend, place them directly to the side of the camera. Keep this conversational!

The people we care for have unique situations. Developmental Foundations has built teams for every home to provide as much support as each developmentally disabled person needs.

From us DSPs, to advocates and supervisors, to nurses and counselors, we all work together to enrich their lives. Every day brings new challenges, but we have the tools and team to face them head on, growing and learning together.
